And still further, he gives it as his opinion that no "official can decide how much money or currency the people need in their business." The time has not come to solve that problem. For the present we are sure that contraction makes the money we have dearer and harder to get; and hence our taxes more difficult to pay. A contraction policy dwarfs enterprise, stagnates industry ents off varance and the contraction to the says and the London Times, Herald, Post, and the London Times, Herald, Post, and all such papers. They made no impression, so the Richmond papers tell us. All his nice talk about Virginia's honor counted for nothing with the overwhelming majority of the two houses. They realized with Sir John Falstaff that honor is a good thing in its place but it "will never mend a broken leg." The Richmond editors are inclined to be severe on those who talk about honor these days. They regard it as the language of "bomb proofs" rather than of those who bore the heat and burden of the day during the war. The Whig, for instance, discourses as follows on this

"The fervid declamation we hear about honor would better become the first stages of a revolution, when ardent young men, emulous of fame, are rallying to the virgin and unfurled banner—before the battle has been fought and lost. Such designation at a period like the present is ill-timed.—The Nashville Banner, in its second a period like the present is ill-timed and out of place. It suits not the grave and gray-headed fathers of the Commonwealth, who are responsible to God and to posterity for the wise and faithful execution of the trust committed to

They please the ear, and excite in their hearers a sort of sympathetic glow—a phosphorescent and short-lived enthusiasm. But their words

"Who does the best his circumstance allows Does well—acts nobly; angels can do no more."

Who would ever have expected to read such "come down" language in a Richmond newspaper of the orthodox school. We remember when that immortal braggart, Pryor, made his speech at the Atheneum here, he descanted largely on what Virginia would never submit to on account of the tenderness and general immaculateness of her honor, which to her and to every true son of her's, was immensely dearer than life itself. A vulgar Yankee who was born insensible to honor, was the only person who, in Pryor's opinion, above any other human consideration. The wees of Virginia are not one but many. In addition to the other calamities that now press upon her, the town and vicinity of Alexandria are to be re-annexed to the Distirct of Columbia. West Virginia, it is claimed, was taken out of the Old Dominion by a sort of Cæsarian operation, and not by the regular process. The counties of Berkeley and Jefferson were taken by a still greater disregard of regularly and rights, and now Alexandria is also after their return from Egypt, "Me have ye bereaved of my children.
